“Are you still managing or are you already inspiring?” With this question in mind, I design and conduct my leadership trainings. The individual resources are the base to develop my participants toward the next level of professionalism. It doesn't matter, whether it is leading in the international context or leading of virtual teams. Inspirational power is the fundamental trait of humans in charge.

My aspiration is to induce a self-learning momentum at my participants. Here, I can draw from my more than 25 years of experience in various leadership functions in multinational enterprises as well as in family owned companies.

I am extremely passionate about my core training profile. For example, I focus on ambidextrous leadership, convincing presentation and moderation as well as on mastering your voice- and speech. For all of these, I use proven elements of century-old practices and insights of Shaolin Qi Gong.

For all my projects, I start to identify which strategic and operational challenges my customers have. Based on that insight, I select the most useful tools that we have available in the rich moveon-toolbox and customize it to the best benefit for my customers. All of this is done in continuous dialogue with my customers. My latest international and large-scale project was the support for the transformation of a corporate culture towards new business models in e-mobility.

My inner belief, I developed throughout my carrier: “No motivated and skilled people – no sustainable and successful business.”
